The Book of Sir Thomas Moore

[HARLEIAN MS. 7368, c. 1590-96]

The present issue will doubtless prove one of the most interesting and acceptable of the continuation series of "The Tudor Facsimile Texts": from the commencement in 1907 no other play has been more frequently asked for by subscribers.

In the British Museum Catalogue it is stated that 7368 is bound up together with 7367 and 5152. This is not now the case, the MS. having, some fifty years ago, been separated and bound by itself. Thus 7368 contains only (with a certain exception) "The Book of Sir Thomas Moore," the first page of which has, in the margin, what appears to be an authorisation for its performance, signed by "E. Tyllney."

The manuscript is very indistinct, the original having been overlaid with tissue paper to preserve it. This has been done with a large proportion of the text of the play.

The first four pages of the manuscript are parchment, half-covered with a Latin treatise with ornamental capitals, and with marginal references written in a smaller hand. Three of these pages are now omitted as having nothing whatever to do with our play. On the fourth, however, there is at the foot of the page, to be read by turning the manuscript upside down, a bold heading, forming, as it were, a kind of title. This page is therefore given.

The manuscript has been thrice reprinted in modern times, by Dyce, Hopkinson and Brooke, but never before in facsimile. Thirty-six years ago the founder of the New Shakspere Society announced "Autotypes of the parts of the Play of Sir Thomas More that may possibly be in young Shakspere's handwriting from the Harleian MS. 7368," but these never appeared, as far as I can learn. Moreover, the confusion and difficulty of the text, together with the obvious misplacement of some of the leaves, have, in the absence of the original at close quarters, proved serious drawbacks to anything like a critical text: the state of the manuscript will now render all future editors dependent on Dyce for many readings which, once legible, are now hopeless.

From the reproduction point of view the pages in their original state are simple enough, except for the stains. On the other hand, those with tracing-paper overlay are most difficult, especially where contact is bad. The probable cause of decay is damp, combined with ink corrosion. Repair is not likely to have caused further decay; on the contrary it has probably arrested it. The tracing-paper facing is without doubt to hold the parts together, as in places the paper is corroded right through, following the line taken by the ink. It was probably repaired at the time it was rebound, which from appearance was fifty to sixty years ago.

The British Museum authorities have, within necessary restrictions, been very courteous and helpful in the matter of reproduction. They had, moreover, under consideration the possibility of temporarily removing the "overlays," so that more perfect photographs of the pages involved might be taken, but I regret to say that Dr. Warner, after consultation with the binders, has "reluctantly come to the conclusion that he cannot sanction the stripping of the leaves, as that operation would involve some risk of irreparable damage to the MS."

Engl. 11F10 Stechert, 10.50 Continuation

Scholars must therefore be content with the next best thing as afforded by the present facsimile. How near it is to the original may be gleaned from Mr. Herbert's letter as follows :—

> "I have come to the conclusion that this reproduction of 'Sir Thomas More' is just about as "good as is possible of a very difficult MS. to reproduce at all. On the worst pages it fails to be a "complete substitute for the original, for the reason which I have set forth on ff. 4 and 4b—as any "reproduction is bound to fail. But I have no doubt that it comes as near success as photography "admits of, and the less damaged pages are admirably reproduced—nothing could be better—with "the very few exceptions that I have noted.—British Museum, 5th January, 1910."

To come to detail, Mr. Herbert earmarks as "excellent" ff. 2b, 6, 7, 7b, 9, 10, 10b, 12, 12b, 13, 13b, 15, 15b, 17, 17b, 20, 20b, 21, 22.

His remarks respecting ff. 4 and 4b are as follows: "There is too much of a uniform blur, where in original it can be read, though with difficulty. But I do not see how this could have been avoided, for the legibility of the text depends in many places on minute variations in colour which photographs, however good, cannot reproduce. On the whole this page and others could hardly be improved. Even the faintness was probably necessary, for greater strength would only have made the stained parts more hopeless still." These remarks apply to all the folios not enumerated above.

So far Mr. Herbert; but I think it only right to record and to emphasise in this place the extreme pains taken to obtain the best possible results by the photographer, Mr. R. Fleming, and in no less degree the watchful care of the printers, Messrs. Howard & Jones, Ltd., whose work is in this instance acknowledged to be a triumph of craftsmanship.

Edmund Tilney was (says the D.N.B.) the third son of Thomas Tilney of Shelley, Suffolk. On 24th July, 1579, Tilney was appointed Master of the Revels in the Royal Household, and held the office for nearly thirty years. All dramatic performances and entertainments at Court were under his control. He selected the plays and helped to revise the masques which were performed in the Sovereign's presence, while outside the Court he was entrusted with the duty of licensing plays for public representation and publication. Consequently he was in constant communication with Philip Henslowe, the chief theatrical manager of the period, the payments he received from Henslowe and other managers in the shape of licensing fees forming an important part of his income. During his tenure of office in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. all dramatic productions, including the greater number of Shakespeare's plays, were submitted to his criticism in manuscript before they were represented on the Stage. He retired, owing to infirm health, in 1608.

of ther neare approche [illegible]

[illegible] in [illegible] and [illegible] husband.
I tell you, this naughtie lewde imagination
Does lead you and [illegible] in a very strange delusion.
This is not Wisedome, but Lady Vanitie.
Therefore list to good counsell, and be ruled by me.

Iuli: In troth my lord, it is a right to Huggin & his partakers, pray Witt.

Moore: Nay, we will not pass our audience disappointed, if I can help it.

Witt: But upon good Counsell, and wilt take me so.
Counsell upon paine Witt from Lady Wisedome to you.
Then art some designer, I tell thee verily.
In saying that this is Lady Vanitie.

Moore: Witt, indeed not thinke to be the outwarde shewe
The ordinarie mistake, it is well con for knowe.
Good reputell upon this poore lie,
That this is not Wisedome, but Lady Vanitie.
Enter Huggin with the band.

Iuli: Oh my Lord, see is round, now we shall goe forwarde.

Moore: But upon me! well fellowes, I pray help to sand thine sons in a little
Now, let upon run to my Witt and Collier counsell there I pray found, pardon
Thanke I have sir to the marie.
But by this time, I dare sind our banquets ready,
My Lord, and Fadres, we will taste that first,
And then we shall begin the play again
Nothing towards the pallaces [illegible]
in [illegible] fellowes, take this shepherd
Prepare against the [illegible] I tell thee I say,
Thou foolish [illegible] doe [illegible] make the play.

Witt. The fellowes Huggin, and Friends pay nought, doe not hinder me.

Hug. [illegible], Mayle read not with [illegible], and all [illegible] not [illegible] and [illegible], [illegible] I ran [illegible] that [illegible] against.

Iuli: Doe ye speake [illegible]? round to my Lord make a good place. [illegible]
[illegible] round about all [illegible], better than [illegible] play
[illegible]: [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to the matter, and [illegible]
[illegible] parte, although it is in [illegible] [illegible].

Witt. Speare, doe ye [illegible] speake [illegible]? my Lord a place. Let us [illegible] any such matter: yet [illegible] a little [illegible], that my Lord may [illegible] in the [illegible], but [illegible], let us [illegible] and be [illegible] let begin the play again.

Hug. I, [illegible] best, [illegible] last nothing.
